1. Inform your staff

Issue a communication to your staff highlighting your Chartered status and your commitment to helping them develop the highest standards of technical knowledge and ethical behaviour.

2. Tell prospective employees

Include details in job descriptions and adverts and incorporate in your company welcome pack. Chartered status is a clear indicator of the professional standing of your firm. People like to work for the best companies and Chartered firms are viewed as 'best of breed' in their market sectors.

8. Create a referral network

Contact other professional services firms in your area – accountants, solicitors, surveyors – and form a network of like-minded professionals who can cross-refer clients when appropriate.

7. Badge your premises

Display Chartered certificates in the reception area of all your offices, incorporate on company signage and place a Chartered sticker in your office window. Ensure that everyone passing or stepping into your premises is aware of your Chartered status.

6. Raise your profile through PR

Differentiate yourself and raise your profile locally. Issue a press release highlighting your new exclusive status to local newspapers and business supplements. Offer to write about what Chartered status means. Nine simple ways to spread the word about your Chartered status.

3. Notify existing customers

Inform existing clients of your new status in writing – a great opportunity to refresh contact. Explain the exclusivity of the title, how it underpins best practice and good customer service and is a commitment to ethical behaviour.

4. Be accessible to new customers

As a Chartered firm, you are eligible for inclusion on the CII's online publicly searchable directory of Chartered firms. This includes details of the classes of business you deal with, together with your firm's contact details. The responsible member of your firm can update your details at www.cii.co.uk/myCII

5. Advertise your success

Ensure any contact with potential customers or business referrers makes explicit reference to your exclusive Chartered status in all communications, mailshots, adverts, sponsorships etc.
