Heritage

In 1912, the Federation of Insurance Institutes of Great Britain and Ireland was granted a Royal Charter by the Privy Council of King George V and became the Chartered Insurance Institute.

Today, Queen Elizabeth II is patron of the CII, the fourth head of state to have been bestowed the honour since her grandfather, King George V, who, after granting the Royal Charter, opened the CII headquarters at Aldermanbury, London, in 1934.

The Queen played a key role in the Institute's development in 1987, when she updated the Royal Charter, which requires us to 'secure and justify the confidence of the public'.
