Introduction

The business case for diversity and inclusion is clear to us all. Forbes reports that diversity and inclusion are essential in business today, a variety of people from different backgrounds and cultures provides us with a balance of voices and thoughts.1

Yet we have a way to go in our profession in utilising the diverse thinking and creativity that is out there. There are many ways we can all make a difference as we continue to embrace diversity and value inclusion and one way is to start looking at how we recruit.

I hope you find this booklet a useful source of inspiration to make a difference.

What is inclusive recruitment and why is it important?

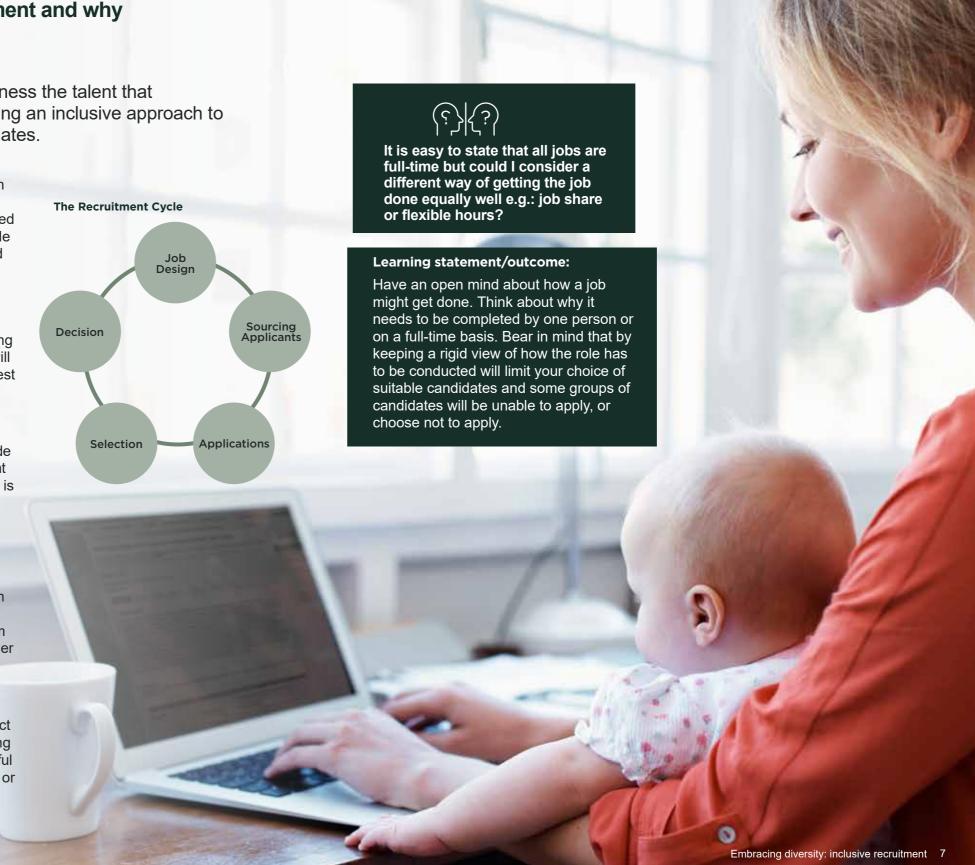

We have an opportunity to harness the talent that is available from society by using an inclusive approach to attracting and selecting candidates.

In order for organisations to prosper, gain a competitive edge and flourish in a rapidly changing business and economic environment, employers need to have a diverse workforce with a wide variety of experience, skills, views and ideas. Employers also need to be ahead of the game when it comes to ensuring that they have the next generation of skilled people ready to take their organisations forward. Having a robust and diverse talent pipeline will ensure that organisations stand the best chance of succeeding in the future marketplace.

The first step that employers need to take to make their talent pipeline as wide as possible is to review their recruitment procedures to ensure that each stage is as inclusive as possible.

Inclusive recruitment is ensuring that there are fair, equitable and equal opportunities for all candidates during the whole recruitment and selection process. It includes ensuring that each stage of the recruitment cycle is accessible and relevant to people from a diverse range of backgrounds in order to enhance diversity and ensure that there is no discrimination against any group of people.

While nothing in the EHRC Equality Act 2010² prevents an employer from hiring the best person for the job, it is unlawful for an employer to discriminate in any or the arrangements made to fill a vacancy, in the terms of employment that are offered or in any decision to refuse someone a job.

Is diversity important to employers?

An increasing number of organisations are now considering how they can link together their recruitment and selection strategy and their diversity and inclusion strategy.

Aligning recruitment and inclusion

Q: Are your organisation's recruitment and selection strategy and diversity strategy aligned?³

	All sectors	Financial services
Yes – completely	30%	31%
Yes – somewhat	51%	45%

Recruiting more diverse talent

Q: Is your organisation actively trying to attract and recruit more diverse talent?³

	All sectors	Financial services
Yes – increase female hires	58%	76%
Yes – increase minority hires	49%	51%

Is diversity important to employers?⁴

46% of employers do not have programmes in place to attract diverse candidates.

According to a study conducted in 2014 by Bersin by Deloitte.⁵ When employees think their organisation is committed to diversity and they fell included, employees report better business performance in terms of ability to innovate (83% uplift), responsiveness to changing customer needs (31% uplift), and team collaboration (42% uplift).

The first stage of any recruitment process should be job design.

Job design

10 Embracing diversity: inclusive recruitment

This involves describing the role as accurately and clearly as possible in a job description and listing, in a person specification, the qualifications, skills and experience that candidates should possess in order to apply. During their preparation, employers need to consider carefully whether any of the contents could be discouraging suitable applicants from applying.

If there is only an occasional requirement, do you need to include it here?

It may discourage people with caring responsibilities from applying who could make arrangements for the odd occasion.

Job design

Person Specifications

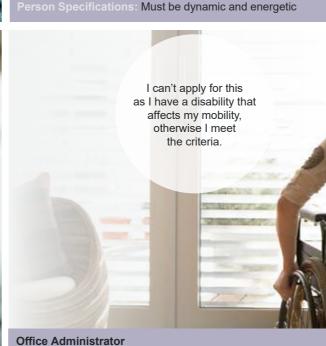

Person Specifications: Must have 5 years continuous service

Person Specifications: Must be physically fit and active

How do I ensure that the pool of potential candidates is as wide as possible when recruiting for a role?

Learning statement/outcome:

Ensure that your jobs are designed so that you are not excluding, even unintentionally, certain groups of people from applying. Determine whether you have any deficit or underrepresentation in your organisation, e.g. gender, ethnicity, disability, etc.

If you don't, then the pool of candidates you are selecting from will be limited.

Sourcing applicants

Employers should consider how they source candidates to ensure that they are reaching and attracting a wide, diverse population of candidates.

Consideration should be given to the employer branding and what message is being sent out to potential candidates of people the organisation is seeking to employ. The same advice applies to drafting recruitment adverts as it does to preparing the job description and person specifications to ensure that the advert content is inclusive and does not deter applicants from a certain group.

Recruitment agencies

It is essential that any recruitment agencies that organisations work with understand the organisation's Diversity and Inclusion policy and any diversity monitoring processes that are in place.

Positive action

Positive action refers to when an organisation takes action in order to try and address any inequalities, including those caused by previous discriminatory practices. Positive action may consist of actively encouraging a certain group of underrepresented people to apply for a role e.g.. non-white candidates or supporting former care givers who are returning to work after a career break through offering returnships (or high level internships). Positive action means that if you have two equally qualified and experienced candidates for a vacancy you may decide to select the candidate who is under represented in the workplace.

Do you think your employer brand would be negatively affected if a recruitment agency working on your behalf did not recognise the value of diversity and inclusion practices?

Learning statement/outcome:

Ensure that any sourcing processes are aligned with your employer brand and Diversity and Inclusion policies and that the policies and practices of any recruitment agencies you are using are aligned with your organisation.

Stats:

- 90 percent of Generation X and Millennial marketers believed that diverse representation in marketing materials, including websites, can improve a brand's reputation.⁷
- Forty-nine per cent of employers do not state their interest in hearing from diverse candidates, barely an improvement on the 48% who responded in this way in 2022's survey.⁸
- Sixty per cent have reviewed the wording of their job adverts to improve inclusion, up from 54%last year.
 Seven per cent do not currently state their interest in hearing from diverse candidates, but plan to do so in future.⁹

Selection

The selection stage comprises of shortlisting for interview, the assessment process, interviews and the decision-making around which candidate to appoint.

Shortlisting for interview

To ensure inclusive shortlisting, employers should try to have more than one person short-listing candidates to limit any possible bias or discrimination. Short-listing criteria should be agreed in advance of the short-listing process and be based on the requirements of the role.

The assessment process

When deciding on what type of assessments to carry out during the selection process, employers need to ensure that they use assessments that are well designed, have high levels of validity and reliability, and are administered by a trained professional. Candidates should be informed about the assessments in advance and given an understanding of what will be involved. Employers should ask candidates if they require any reasonable adjustments to be made to assist them when taking the assessment. If you are holding at an Assessment Centre then ask all attendees if they have any special dietary or other requirements. Also consider if any of the assessments are critical and could potentially exclude individuals as they may not perform well in these situations.

Interviews

Interviews are still the most popular selection method amongst employers. Interviewers need to be careful that they allow candidates to properly demonstrate their skills and suitability for the role and avoid making an inappropriate snap judgments on the individual. All applicants also need to be given the same opportunity to demonstrate their suitability for the role.

Unconscious bias (where people stereotype about certain groups of people, often without being conscious of doing it) needs to be mitigated against as much as possible during the interview process. Strategies for doing this include having pre-set interview questions designed to assess fit against the requirements of the role. These questions are asked of every candidate and are then methodically, consistently and objectively scored at the end of the interview process. Employers need to concentrate on the specific requirements of the role and ascertain whether they think the candidate meets these requirements. Questions that are not relevant to the role, should not be asked. If certain interview questions are seen as being more important to the role than others then these questions can be weighted so that the candidate with the highest overall score is the most suitable for the role.

Selection

Decision-making

Decisions as to which candidate to appoint must be fair, objective and transparent and not based on:

- · First impressions of the candidate.
- · Assumptions and stereotypes.
- · Prejudice.
- Halo or horns effect (only focusing on the good or the bad parts).
- Mirroring (selecting candidates that are similar to you).
- The candidate's personality rather than skills, abilities and experience.
- Placing excessive weight onto one part of the selection process.

If an employer has two candidates that are very similar in their skills, abilities and experience then they will have to make a judgement as to which candidate to appoint. When making this decision, however, employers need to be aware of possible unconscious bias and try to remain as objective as possible. If none of the candidates meet the requirements of the role then it is better to start the recruitment process again rather than offer the role to a candidate who is not quite right for the role.

STATS:

79 percent of companies in the financial-services sector offer unconscious-bias training¹¹.

Avoiding discrimination in recruitment

Disability

It is good practice to ask candidates if they need any adjustments or modifications made at any stage of the recruitment and selection process. Be mindful that disabilities maybe unseen, e.g., neurodivergent - Dyslexia, Dyspraxia etc.

Employers must make any adjustments or modifications requested if they are seen as reasonable. After making an offer, employers can ask the candidate if they require any adjustments or modifications made to enable them to do their job.

The proportion of disabled people decreased in every region of England in 2021. The region with the highest proportion of disabled people was the North East (21.2%, 567,000), as it had been in 2011 (22.8%, 562,000). In 2021, the North East was followed by the North West (19.8%, 1.4 million) and Yorkshire and The Humber (18.9%, 1.0 million). Meanwhile, London (15.7%, 1.2 million) and the South East (16.1%, 1.5 million) had the lowest proportions of disabled people. 12

Gender

Employers need to be aware of unconscious thoughts and assumptions that they may make during the recruitment and selection process concerning a candidate's gender.

It may not be obvious at first but assumptions could result in candidates being indirectly discriminated against.

Women are under-represented in senior business leadership. As of 2022, 21 women were in the position of chief executive officers (CEOs) at FTSE 100 and FTSE 250 companies, with 9 at FTSE 100 companies, and 12 at FTSE 250 ones.¹³.

HM Treasury Women in Finance Charter 2022: findings. Meeting targets: A third (34%) of the 235 signatories analysed in this review have met their targets for female representation in senior management, and a further 47% that have targets with future deadlines said they are on track to meet them.¹⁴

Avoiding discrimination in recruitment

Sexual orientation

Employers need to be careful that they do not make assumptions about a candidate's sexual orientation and that any recruitment and selection decisions are not directly or indirectly discriminating on the basis of sexual orientation.

In total: 43.4 million people (89.4% of the population aged 16 years and over) identified as straight or heterosexual. 748,000 (1.5%), described themselves as gay or lesbian in 2021.¹⁵

Trans people

Employers need to be careful that they do not let recruitment and selection decisions to be affected if a candidate has undergone or is undergoing gender reassignment.

'Transgender' is currently a term used as an inclusive, umbrella term describing all those whose gender expression falls outside the typical gender norms.¹⁴

Age

Employers need to think carefully about whether any part of their recruitment and selection process could be excluding or deterring candidates of certain ages, both young and old,

The UK Census 2021 results show the population of England and Wales has continued to age since 2011. The number of people aged 65 years and over increased from 9.2 million in 2011 to over 11 million in 2021 and the proportion of people aged 65 years and over rose from 16.4% to 18.6%.¹⁵

Marriage/Civil Partnership

Employers need to be careful that they do not let recruitment and selection decisions to be affected by whether the candidate is married or in a civil partnership.

According to the UK Office of National Statistics 15

In 2021, there were 6,731 civil partnerships formed in England and Wales, a decrease of 19.4% from 8,351 in 2020.

The majority (5,692) of civil partnership formations in 2021 were between opposite-sex couples; this is a decrease of a quarter (24.8%) from 7,566 in 2020, the first full year that opposite-sex civil partnerships had been possible in England and Wales..

There were 1,039 same-sex civil partnerships formed in England and Wales in 2021, an increase of 32.4% from 785 in 2020; of these, the majority of formations were among male couples (56.9%).

Avoiding discrimination in recruitment

Pregnancy and Maternity

An employer cannot decide not to offer a role to a pregnant woman due to her pregnancy, a pregnancy-related illness or because they are on maternity leave.

The Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS) and the Equality and Human Rights Commission ¹⁶ conducted a study that found that around one in nine mothers (11%) reported that they were either dismissed; made compulsorily redundant, where others in their workplace were not; or treated so poorly they felt they had to leave their job.

If scaled up to the general population this could mean as many as 54,000 mothers a year.

Race/Ethnicity

Employers need to ensure that their final selection decision is based on objectivity and not on personal views, attitudes, prejudices and bias relating to a candidate's actual or perceived race/ethnicity.

People Management reported in October 2022 of 1,203 UK employees surveyed it was found that while over half (52 per cent) had witnessed racism at work, only one in five (22 per cent) reported the incident to management or HR.¹⁶

Religion/Belief

Employers need to ensure that their recruitment and selection processes are accessible to people of all religions and beliefs.

When planning interviews/assessment Days, employers should consider:

- Avoiding religious festivals and holidays.
- Allowing candidates to pray during the assessment.
- Checking if any candidates have any specific dietary requirements e.g. halal, kosher, vegan.
- Ensuring that any dress code doesn't discriminate against someone on grounds of their religion or belief.
